

A STEER REVIEW BEFORE TUESDAY'S SERA GRAY DEMO

Tobias, what do we actually walk through on Tuesday?

Sera is on the call next Tuesday. You own the architecture and the demo. Before Jeff sits in that room, we need thirty minutes of your time to line the two up — so what we show her matches what you have running, and nothing gets promised on the surface that you have not confirmed is walkable.

THREE QUESTIONS FOR THE REVIEW01 What is genuinely live today?

Which slices of the delivered platform can we open in the room and click through against real Epiq data — Datasphere-wired paths, the manually extracted sales-order and change tables in Azure, the pattern-analysis layer, the Teams access layer? For each, one honest sentence: latency, known gaps, and whether it will survive a live click.

02 What do we deliberately not show?

Where does the demo edge to something not yet wired or something that would misrepresent the state of the work — Bullhorn on the AWS side, the parts of Datasphere paused when tax dragged, anything still on your bench? We want you naming these before the call, not Sera discovering them.

03 What is the one thing that lands?

If Sera watches ninety seconds of this and nothing else, what is the single walkable moment that carries the argument — BW-redundant reporting today, or the DMZ-bound model reading Epiq's sovereign data and returning a prioritized list to Billing operations? Your call, because you know what actually runs.

WHY THIS MATTERS

Jeff will be selling the surface Sera already has in her hand — the landing page, the seven-slide deck, the four-step pattern that also carries to SAP. The demo has to sit under that surface without a seam. You are the only person who can tell us where the seam actually is.

THE ASK

Thirty minutes with you before end of day Friday 2026-09-05, on Teams or a call. Jeff and Dany on the line. Screen-share your current demo state, answer the three questions above in your own words, mark anything on Sera's surface that is not yet true. Nothing formal. No slides required from your side — you bring what runs, we bring what has been said.

WHAT COMES OUT OF THE THIRTY MINUTES

- ☐ Confirm a 30-minute slot before EOD Fri 2026-09-05.
- ☐ Screen-share the current demo state; walk through what is live.
- ☐ Name the parts we do NOT show Sera on Tuesday.
- ☐ Pick the single ninety-second moment that carries the argument.
- ☐ Anything on the landing page or in the deck that is not yet walkable — flag it, we correct the surface before the call.
